Torch Murderers Sentenced To Life In Michigan Jails

3 Confessed Slayers Are Tried and Sentenced Within Six Hours

WOMAN IS ARRESTED

Sweetheart of Condemned Man Held for Questioning by Police

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—(AP)—Three torch slayers, called flenders in human form, by the judge who sentenced them in solitary confinement, Friday were in Jackson prison serving the first day of a life sentence for killing and burning two young couples on a lonely country road early Tuesday. They confessed, were sentenced and in jail within six hours Thursday night.

A new angle, unmentioned by the men in their confessions was revealed early Friday with the arrest of Catherine Keller, 25, at her home in Ypsilanti.

Officers said they were investigating reports that she accompanied the killers when they robbed the couples, attacked one of the girls, killed them and burned the bodies in the car.

Deputies said she was the sweetheart of Fred Smith, who with David Blackstone, a negro, and Frank Oliver were sentenced for the killings.

Texas Paper Raps Farm Board Advice

Farmers May Face Prosecution If They Plow Up Cotton

ABILENE, Tex.—(AP)—The Abilene Morning News, commenting editorially, warns that the federal farm board's suggestion that farmers plow up every third row of cotton "may get a lot of cotton farmers into a jam," by causing them to destroy a crop that, in many instances, mortgaged to the government to satisfy seed loans.

The editorial says that "if farmers listen to that advice, they will lay themselves liable to prosecution under the mortgage law, theoretically if not actually."

"It's a fine kettle of fish," the editorial observes. "First, the government loans money to arise crops, taking an ironclad mortgage to insure repayment of the loan. Then the farm board advises the mortgagee to go out and destroy a portion of that crop. If the farmer does what one branch of the government tells him to do, he may be prosecuted by a second branch of the government on an agreement with the third branch."

"If the farm board believes in destroying property why does it not burn those 3,000,000 bales of cotton it says it controls?"

May Have Paid for Other's Crime

Do you think they look alike? A New York druggist did—and as a result, 19-year-old Patrick O'Brien (right), has spent six months in jail for a crime which he may not have committed. The druggist identified O'Brien as a bandit who held him up and robbed his store. Now Francis "Two Gun" Crowley (left), youthful gunman arrested in a battle with police recently, is reported to have admitted that the drug store robbery may have been one of his own "jobs." O'Brien may go free.

Sevier Official Clears Old Account

Pays $4452 on $13,000 Due—Embezzlement Charge Dismissed

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—State Auditor J. Oscar Humphrey Thursday received check for $4452.20 and a letter from Attorney General H. L. Norwood suggesting that the amount be accepted as a full settlement of accounts to the state from Rex Hooper, former sheriff of Sevier county. Norwood suggested that in view of the drought last year, and business conditions, the sum be accepted as full settlement.

A charge of embezzlement against former Sheriff Hooper was dismissed in circuit court at DeQueen Wednesday when Hooper produced a receipt from the attorney general showing that he had settled in full with the state.

He was charged with a shortage of $13,000 in his settlement with the state. Norwood said in the letter that it might not be possible to collect the full amount on the bond.

Schools to Work Out Own Destiny Says Overstreet

Magnolia College President Says Their Ills No Worse Than Business'

SIX MONTHS, MAYBE

Short Term for Year or Two May Be Necessary for Individual Districts

The public schools of Arkansas are facing no worse crisis than private business; they got into their present financial troubles, and they will have to work their way out, President C. A. Overstreet of Magnolia A. & M. college told Hope Rotary club in Hotel Barlow Friday.

"I have no general idea as to a solution of the financial problem of the schools," Mr. Overstreet continued. "The problem will have to be solved according to the condition of each individual district. I do not say this officially, but my personal advice to many a school director would be, run as long as your money holds out. A year or two of six-month schooling might be unfortunate, but it wouldn't be disastrous—and the schools will eventually and certainly work back to their normal condition again."

What Magnolia Did
"I judge what the other branches of the public school system will probably do, from what we ourselves had to do at Magnolia A. & M. The last legislature cut down our biennial program by $27,000. We do not hold that against the legislature. The A. & M. colleges simply get a fixed share of the tax on the state's assessed valuation—that valuation has shrunk this year; and when I knew our revenues were to be reduced I cut our expenses accordingly."

Mr. Overstreet made a stout defense of the agricultural and mechanical colleges in Arkansas, of which the Magnolia district school is perhaps the best. Mr. Overstreet joining it as president in 1921.

Opposes Consolidation
"You have heard some talk about consolidating the district schools," Mr. Overstreet said. "I never hear a man propose that but what I feel certain he is ignorant of the facts."

"Magnolia and the other A. & M. schools give two years of college work at a cost to the student of $300 a year for college fees, board, room and clothes. The average at other Arkansas colleges is $750 a year. Magnolia had 300 college students last year. Those 300 students represented a saving to the parents of Arkansas of $135,000."

"I am a believer in the democratization of education. If the state owes a higher education to one child, it owes it to every child. The possession of $750 should not be the test of the availability of a college education, if the state can make this education available for half as much."

No, Arkansas Gets All
"Finally, I would call the attention of those who talk about consolidating the A. & M. colleges to the fact that the tax for higher education in Arkansas is $1.80 for every $1,000 assessed valuation; of this, $1.50 is spent north of the Arkansas river, and only 30 cents south of that river—yet 68 per cent of all the state taxes are paid by the country lying south of the river."

Hope Rotary was excellently entertained Friday by a musical program—a duet by Miss Verna Stuart and Miss Iva Hipp of this city; a solo by the Rev. Byron Cox, Rotarian of Stamps; and a song-and-dance number by Mrs. Kate Scott Holland accompanied by the duet on the piano, and also the Rev. Mr. Cox; while Patsy Ann was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Robert Campbell.

Attending with the Rev. Mr. Cox was another well known member of the Stamps club, Rudy Hayes. President C. C. Spragins presided, and the program was presented by W. Homer Pigg.

Garay Returns to U. S. After Rescue

Found Clinging to Wreckage of Plane in Ocean Tuesday

SAVANNAH, Ga.—(AP)—Swathed in bandages and weak from exhaustion Captain Lisandro Garay, of the Honduran army air corps, was brought into Savannah Thursday morning after clinging for 35 hours to the tail of his wrecked plane in the Gulf of Mexico, 18 miles off Cape Lockout, N. C.

With him aboard the American-Brazil line steamer Biboc, which rescued him at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, was brought the wrecked monoplane, in which he left New York Sunday afternoon on an attempted non-stop flight to Honduras.

Garay told a dramatic story of his unsuccessful flight, forced descent into the sea, and his rescue.

"I left New York about 5 p. m. Sunday for a non-stop solo flight to Tegucigalpa, Honduras," he said. "My plane was a Bellanca equipped for long distance flying."

"I flew straight down to Cape May, then to Suffolk and south to Bellhaven and thence by Wilmington, N. C."

"I kept my head, and by the cities passed on the coast, I was able to know my position. I knew what I was doing and I prepared my ship for an ocean landing."

Captain Garay said he had experimented extensively in the methods of bringing a land ship down on water, and that little damage was done by his forced descent.

"After landing," he continued, "I found I could not get the door open and I had to break a window in the plane. The wind was blowing 50 miles an hour and as I broke the window, fragments of glass were blown into the cabin cutting my face and hands."

"Blood from the gashes was sprayed on the tail fin of the plane 20 feet away by the wind."

Alone in the choppy sea, Captain Garay kept the plane afloat by releasing gasoline from the tanks, which, when empty, acted as boys.

Senator Caraway Appeals to Hoover and To Governors

Asks Farm Board to Buy 7,000,000 Bales of This Year's Cotton Crop

ASSURES 8c COTTON

Wires Executives of the Southern States for Support of Measure

JONESBORO, Ark.—(AP)—Support of southern governors is being sought by Senator Caraway for a cotton relief proposal under which the Federal Farm Board would purchase seven million bales of this year's cotton crop at 8 or more cents per pound, providing that the farmers agreed not to plant any cotton next year.

He telegraphed state executives Friday urging their support.

Appeals To Hoover

JONESBORO, Ark.—(AP)—Senator T. H. Caraway of Arkansas Thursday proposed to President Hoover and the Farm Board that the board buy 7,000,000 bales of this year's crop from growers who would enter into a contract not to grow cotton next year, as a plan to prevent the increase of the carryover.

His plan, Senator Caraway said, would enable the cotton grower to receive not less than eight cents a pound for his cotton this year, and would leave the acreage upon which the 1,000,000 bales were grown this year free to be planted in other crops next year and guarantee a cotton acreage reduction, which he said was the only feasible plan for relief.

The plan as detailed by Senator Caraway is:

That the government purchase at not less than eight cents a pound 7,000,000 bales of cotton, and then allocate this cotton to farmers who would enter into contracts with the Farm Board agreeing not to grow any cotton in 1932. Farmers who enter into this contract would have allotted the number of bales each is accustomed to growing, and should he grow cotton in 1932, his contract would be cancelled.

Cotton so allocated would be held by the board for the benefit of the farmer until such time during 1932 as the farmer might request it to be sold. Proceeds of the sale would be paid the farmer, less the cost and carrying charges, including interest not to exceed four per cent.

"A sufficient number of farmers will be glad to enter into such a contract," Senator Caraway's message read, "because it will give them the amount of cotton each is accustomed to grow at a price less than the cost of production and leave him his land for other crops. The result will be: It will assure this crop to bring at least eight cents a pound."

"2. It will guarantee to reduce the 1932 cotton crop by at least 7,000,000 bales and thus wipe out the carryover and make possible a fair price for the next year's crop."

"3. It will bring at least half of the cotton growers into co-operative action with the Farm Board and thus accomplish one aim of that board."

Farnell in Opposition

FORREST CITY.—The Federal Farm Board's proposal that one-third of the cotton crop be destroyed is impractical and could not be accomplished without great difficulty, Governor Farnell said at a gathering of approximately 500 farmers and cotton buyers from towns throughout eastern Arkansas who attended a barbecue given here Thursday by C. A. Manly, superintendent of the Federal Compress and Warehouse Company.

The governor suggested that instead of destroying one-third of the 1931 cotton crop, growers should harvest the crop and apply the proceeds on their debts. He also advised a reduction of acreage next year.

Harry Worley, president of the Little Rock Cotton Exchange, and Mark Valentine, Pulaski county planter, also spoke in opposition to the Farm Board's plan to increase the price of cotton by destroying one-third of the crop.

Boards Plan "Tommyrot"

WILSON, Ark.—(AP)—R. E. Lee Wilson, well known planter Thursday termed as "tommyrot" the proposal of the federal Farm Board that one-third of the cotton crop be destroyed.

"Prices on clothing and merchandise are lower than in years. Why not destroy one-third of the stock of all merchants?" he asked.

"The crop is practically made, and it's right there in the fields. It would be foolish to ask the farmer to destroy it. Let us go ahead and gather our crops this year. Then, next year, perhaps we can cut out cotton."

Captured After Stealing Safe

Thugs Take 3-Ton Vault From Missouri Bank and Cart It Away

A third member of the party escaped.

Kiwanis Addressed Thursday By Cox

Optimism Expressed Despite Downturn of 1931 Cotton Prices

Kiwanians are to hold their next meeting at Collier's Lake according to plans formulated Thursday night at Hotel Barlow. John P. Cox was placed in charge of the arrangements committee for the out-door meet.

It is expected that work may start on the Kiwanis fountain next week. This fountain is to be built on the southeast corner of the city hall square.

The club is furnishing the material with which to place a roof on the Boy Scout hut, which has been constructed by the local troop in Fair park.

Mr. Cox asked for an optimistic spirit on the part of Kiwanis, and all business men, in a plea to offset the effects of the recent drop in the price of cotton. He pointed out that while cotton had sunk to new low levels, the farmers would fare much better than during last season. "Many people seem to have the blues," he said, "over the price of cotton, although the smallest crop in history, and many farmers, who are not well supplied with winter food and feeds, will net a tidy sum from the sale of their cotton, even at present prices. Local farmers who got 8c or 10c for a small crop of cotton last year, and which cost a lot of money to produce, find they have an unusually big yield this year, which cost them but little to grow. We expect many people may be surprised at the large volume of fall business."

A. E. Stonequist told how he has ordered heavily of fall and winter merchandise, and expects a large volume of trade. He told how many farmers would not have to buy any feed for their families, leaving them in a position to buy the things those families need to wear, while prices are at rock-bottom.

Arkansas Prisons Will Produce Bumper Crops

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Arkansas' penitentiary farms this year will produce the largest crops of all kinds since the state adopted the agricultural plan for employment of prisoners, Judge W. S. Atkins, of Hope, chairman of the prison commission, said Thursday.

At the Tucker plantation for whites and Cummins for negro prisoners, 9000 acres in cotton are expected to yield between 4500 and 5000 bales, compared with approximately 3500 bales in former years, while a huge crop of corn will be gathered from 5000 acres. Another 1000 acres on the two farms will yield enough hay or other feed crops to last a year without the necessity of buying any feed for the livestock. Large quantities of fruits and vegetables have been canned to augment the food supply for prisoners.

Charges Against Ice Firms Filed

2 Jonesboro Companies Said to Have Failed to Reduce Rates

JONESBORO.—Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Claud Brinton filed indictment Thursday against the Associated Utilities and the Home Ice Company, alleging overcharging for ice in Jonesboro.

The companies are charged with not complying with the order of the Arkansas Railroad Commission to lower the rates to 40 and 50 cents. Mr. Brinton visited each of the platforms early Thursday and made a tender of 40 cents for ice which was refused and then paid 50 cents for 100 pounds of ice, he said.

Both companies said they had not had notice of the reduction, claiming they were still selling under the order granted by the commission in 1929, and that they would have to have another hearing before the commission before a reduction could be made.

A telephone message from the assistant secretary of the ice division of the Railroad Commission at Little Rock said the department had mailed notices of the reduction to each of the companies here the latter part of July.

Reed Offers Aid for State Highway Audit

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—State Comptroller Howard Reed has offered to clothe the state highway audit commission with all the powers of his department in making an audit of the highway department.

The commission, which a few months ago said that any auditors whom it might employ to make the audit would lack sufficient authority under the 1931 audit law, will meet Friday and consider Reed's offer to appoint as a deputy comptroller any member of the commission or anyone it may designate.

This, the comptroller believes, would remove any doubt as to the powers of the auditors or the commission.

A Department In Which The Editor of The Star Plays His Own Piano

Administration is a fine thing. Newspaper men appreciate a kindly word for a good bit of writing or a popular policy, as much as anybody—but it will jar some people to know that the acid test of newspaper writing is not whether the public likes it or not, but whether the public is interested at all.

The test of good newspaper policy is that it must be vital to the public interest. Whether the public praises or damns it at the moment of publication is beside the point. If the position is well taken, the public, though it disapprove for a time, will eventually agree. It is the business of a newspaper to be strong enough to ride through until the policy is upheld.

I had this brought to mind by the published statement of—surprisingly enough—a banker. He is Frank M. Totton, second vice-president of the Chase National, New York.

Mr. Totton says: "If I were to find that I had suddenly inherited a great newspaper, I would endeavor, first of all, to obtain the services of the most outstanding editorial writers. After that, I would give them free rein, in order that they might write as convincingly as possible from their own points of view. I think that the greatest public contribution an editorial writer can make is to get people to think, regardless of whether his views correspond to the publisher's personal opinions. An editorial might even outrage the readers of a paper, but if it compelled them to think by way of rebuttal, it would have accomplished its fundamental purpose."

While reading Mr. Totton's statement, I reflected over some recent Arkansas history and the part that the newspapers played. I recall that it was the newspaper publicity about North Carolina's paved highways during the first Camden industrial tour to that section in November, 1928, that helped bring Arkansas sentiment around to the Martineau bill in 1927.

I recall that while editing the El Dorado News at that time it became necessary to advocate the state's going into a long-term bond program—although the politicians thought it was suicide to challenge the state's ancient prohibition of bonds. Tom Terral had founded his 1924 campaign on this prejudice, and was elected. Yet the newspapers took up an unpopular issue and hammered unceasingly until public interest caught on—and the job was done.

I have heard theorists stand on the street corners of three Arkansas cities and deplore and condemn everything that came out of that legislative session of 1927—yet today public sentiment has changed. The reason public sentiment has changed is because you can drive an automobile from Texarkana to Memphis in a few hours on concrete pavement.

The world moves, and the newspapers help the public move along with it, not always praised, not always right, but presenting the facts and letting public opinion catch up.

The world moves so fast, in fact, that although only four years have elapsed since its passage, the inheritors of the Martineau road bill are already involved in a quarrel with the public because there has been no highway department audit. This time the newspapers happen to have taken the popular view, in demanding that an audit be made. Yet I presume most newspapers saw that far ahead when advocating the bonded road program back in 1927. No great public work is undertaken without the responsibility of its being looked after. The highway audit issue may blast some political

Just One Big Happy Family

Tricie, a possum dog, has gone in for family life on a grand scale, as this picture shows. Besides her own puppy, she has adopted 13 baby possums and three raccoons, and here you see them living contentedly together in their New York home. The mother of the possums had died in captivity and the raccoons were deserted by their parents.

careers unless something is done about it—but as compared with the plan and the system that built our roads, this is a subordinate issue. In 1927 we were advocating a theory. Today we are criticizing men.

The stores we checked upon were receiving new supplies of fresh groceries sixty-two times a week—about once every hour.

Of course, some stores get fewer deliveries. Just as others get more. But all of our stores receive new supplies so often that their food simply has to be fresh.

A's and Cardinals Advance Thursday

Rube Walberg Earns His Seventeenth Victory, Beating Detroit

Rube Walberg won his 17th game of the season Thursday when he pitched the Athletics to victory over Detroit, 5 to 2. Walberg held the Tigers hitless for the first five innings, and yielded a total of only four safeties. Walberg has won 17 and lost 4 games.

The Chicago White Sox downed Washington, 10 to 8, the victimized Washington pitcher being Bob Burke, who only recently entered the hall of baseball fame by hitting a no-hit no-run game. St. Louis defeated Boston, 9 to 6, in the other American League game.

The St. Louis Cardinals made it three straight from Brooklyn Thursday, 9 to 5. The Cardinals lengthened their lead in the pennant chase, as the Giants won and lost in a double-header with Pittsburgh, and the Chicago Cubs dropped their game with the Phillies. The Giants took second place from the Cubs, by virtue of the day's developments, but the St. Louis club again gained on the entire field.

Hooks and Slides

A British Threat

FOR the first time in many years, Great Britain is sending a young golfer to the United States amateur with a great chance to make his way to the top. The lad's name is John De Forest, one of the sons of Baron De Forest.

And, if it should happen that Johnny crashes through to the finals, the man whose magic influence had much to do with bringing out Bobby Jones may be given a part of the credit, perhaps most of the credit—or the blame.

Last summer, after observing his son's skill with his clubs, Baron De Forest rewarded him with a trip to this country to familiarize himself with American courses and customs.

Gets Slow Start

THE first American tournament in which Johnny participated was the Winged Foot Invitational last August. He didn't show what might be called genius. In the second round he drew John Forsman and was beaten out, 3 and 1. A couple of weeks later De Forest competed in the Lannin Memorial at Salisbury. He beat the former British champion, Philip Perkins by several strokes, winding up with 304. Captain E. F. Carter won the tournament with 297 and Maurice McCarthy, Jr., one of our own promising young linksmen, was runner up with 303.

Then De Forest went to Merion for the national amateur. But here his putter began taking on strange habits and De Forest sadly chalked up 79 for his first round.

Meets the Master

HE sought a practice green and began toiling over his putts. Nearby, watching him, in a group of newspaper men, stood Stewart Maiden, one of the greatest teachers the game ever has known.

Maiden grimaced as Johnny putted.

"Who is that chap?" asked Maiden.

He was told.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

JOHNNY GOODMAN will be a hard nut for the amateurs at Beverly to crack. . . . If he keeps on playing the way he did when he won the Trans-Mississippi recently. . . . With Jones and Von Elm out, it's anybody's tournament. . . . The veterans will be George Voigt, Phil Perkins, Francis Outmet, Chick Evans, Jess Guilford, Max Marston, Doc Willing and Woody Platt. . . . That is, if you don't count Jimmy Johnston as a veteran. . . . Jess Sweetser couldn't find time to enter this year. . . . Chick Evans might go somewhere if he could get that blasted putter working on two-foot nudges. . . . short putts were hard for Chick even when he was at the peak.

"He's going about it all wrong," said Maiden.

When the criticism of the master was borne to De Forest, he hunted up Maiden at once.

"Show me where I'm wrong. I want to qualify and I know I can't do it if I keep on putting like this," Maiden took him to the east course at Winged Foot. They were there perhaps an hour.

De Forest started on his second round with a rush, shooting a finely putted 36 for his first nine. He missed qualifying by one stroke, encountering bunker setbacks on the way in.

Close to the Top

BUT the lesson of the master stuck. In the British Amateur this year at Westward Ho! John De Forest fought his way to the final, losing by the margin of one hole to Eric Smith.

When the amateurs gather Aug. 31 at the Beverly Country Club, John De Forest and his Maiden-coached putter will be there. It will be a good putter to watch.

Russians Thronging Public Baths Must Take Their Luxury Soapless

MOSCOW—(AP)—A great part of Soviet Russia's population has to go out for its bath.

The public bath house, an institution in old Russia, continues just as important a fixture in the new.

Men, women and children still make their way in great numbers through the streets to the "baths," carrying towels and clean clothing.

The rapid population increase in Moscow and other large centers has created a demand which present bathing facilities are unable to supply and an increase in their number is planned.

In the better public baths, men have the choice of three classes, ranging from the luxury of a swimming pool, shower and tub to the simplicity of buckets of water with which they souse themselves. Women have only classes and swimming pools for them are rare.

The price ranges from 25 to 45 kopeks, with towels extra.

Then there is the deluxe bath, costing seven roubles (about $3.50), where the affluent Russian can surround himself with the luxury of a sumptuously furnished three room bathing apartment.

The chief difficulty for bathers lies in the shortage of soap, not to be had here at even the most exorbitant prices. Many meet the situation by beating their bodies with bundles of birch twigs, the theory being that this opens the pores and permits steam or hot water to complete the cleansing process.

A "first class" bath, which costs 45 kopeks, gives a man the use of the swimming pool—after he has had his bath—and the choice of tub or shower, often in a private compartment.

Second class baths have only showers or tubs, no swimming pool, and the accommodations are more simple.

In third class, where the bather stands on a bare stone floor, scrubs himself first and then rinses off with buckets of water, there is the Russian equivalent of a Turkish bath.

Here the bather enters a small room filled with steam and is able to soak as long as he likes.

Mixed bathing, so common until a few years ago, now is taboo.

Shower Springs

Everyone is enjoying the pleasant weather after being hot so long.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cowell of Texarkana spent one night last week with their sister, Mrs. Virgie England.

J. W. England spent last Thursday night with Will Bowden near Hope and attended church at Hope.

Miss Elnor McWilliams gave an entertainment Friday night, which was enjoyed by all.

Miss Ada May England is at home after spending three months in school at Arkadelphia.

Bryan Ruggles and family returned to their home in St. Dorado after a few days visit with their mother, Mrs. Nez Ruggles.

George Johnson and family and Mr. and Mrs. Kelly Gray were Sunday afternoon guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Reeves.

Mr. and Mrs. John Reed and Mrs. H. W. Fore attended church at Oak Grove and were the dinner guests of Earl Ross and family.

Leon Darwin and family attended church at Hope and was the dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Roberts.

LIANE BARRETT, 18 and beautiful, tries in vain to forget VAN HODNETT when his engagement is announced to MURIEL, LADY, popular debutante. Liane's mother, CAROL BARRETT, is an actress and it is during Van's engagement in stock at a fashionable long island summer colony that the mother meets Mrs. MRS. PATRICK, wealthy widow. When Van goes on tour in the fall Liane becomes Mrs. Cleopatra's secretary. Liane's father, the widow's only son, asks Liane to marry him. Liane cannot believe his father's fortune unless he marries before he is 25. Liane is nervous, agreeing the marriage is to be a matter of form only. MRS. PATRICK, wealthy widow, when Van goes on tour in the fall Liane becomes Mrs. Cleopatra's secretary. Liane's father, the widow's only son, asks Liane to marry him. Liane cannot believe his father's fortune unless he marries before he is 25. Liane is nervous, agreeing the marriage is to be a matter of form only.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLV

TO be young is to be impatient. Tomorrow will not do. It must be today! Liane, thrashing about for a solution to her difficulties, was minded to go to Clive and show her cards. She wanted to say, "Shall we make a clean break of it? I think we'd better. We can't go on this way."

Liane scarcely knew what held her back from this move because as the days passed and Tressa's air of proprietorship over Clive deepened her agony increased. She said to herself, "This is unendurable. Anything would be better than this."

But because she had suffered greatly in the past year she temporized. She watched and waited, by turns despairing and then hopeful.

The day Tressa drove into town with Clive Liane endured agonies of jealousy. "The worst of it was that she had no right to resentment. Only four months ago, she had said to Clive, 'I love someone else.' She had expected sympathy and understanding. She had not stopped to wonder how he might be hurt."

"I've learned a lot about love," Liane mused sadly. "I may make a great many mistakes in the future but never the same ones again."

Muriel came out that day for tea. She was a gay and bright eyed Muriel in a red cap and coat and bright hat which made her look like robin redbreast herself.

They talked of nothing and of everything as they sipped their tea. Liane found Muriel watching her curiously. The other girl blurted out suddenly, "Don't think me a busy-body, but I must tell you everybody's talking about the dead" set Tressa Liane's making at Clive. People wonder why you have her in the house. She's been lunching with him. She even goes to his office. It looks pretty bad. I hate being a babbling, but you're such an innocent I thought perhaps you ought to be told."

Calmly Liane said "It's all right. I know all about it." She managed a smile but her face was lead in her breast.

Muriel shrugged. "Well, I suppose you know your own happiness but to me that girl's a cobra. I wouldn't trust her three minutes with my boy friend."

"She's our guest," Liane said in that same lifeless tone. "Nothing could be wrong."

"Oh, my dear!" Muriel gave her a pitying look. "Don't be that way!"

Liane said "Thanks for telling me. I know you mean it in the friendliest way but honestly everything is all right."

After Muriel had gone she walked up and down, distraught.

"There must be something in all this," she told herself. "Perhaps Clive is trying to let me see it. Perhaps he is just giving me a chance to divorce him."

She tried to shut her eyes to the possibility but Muriel's words made her see the danger anew.

AS the dinner hour neared she nervously herself for the ordeal of facing them both. The plan had been for Clive to drive Tressa home from town but when the clock struck eight the two were still unaccounted for. Liane, wearing her black frock, went into the serving pantry.

"You're certain Mr. Clive hasn't called?"

"No'm. Not yet."

"Perhaps the connection is broken. It seems odd we haven't heard."

The girl lifted the receiver from the telephone and held it to her ear. "No'm. This is all right. The operator said 'Number please' like she always does."

Liane wandered back to the library. She picked up a book and laid it down. With a wrap over her shoulders she went into the garden and watched the road. Down the turnpike half a mile away the headlights of a steady procession of cars could be seen. None turned into the drive.

As she went back into the house, the hall clock chimed the half hour. With an air of decision she rang the bell.

"Ellen, I'll dine alone. Mr. Cleopatra has been delayed."

She could imagine the whispering of the servants behind the closed doors.

At 10 o'clock she went upstairs. She thought, "This is the end. This has been done deliberately to shame me."

Trembling with anger she disrobed. She turned out all the lights save the one in the lamp over her bed. She strove to read but the print danced before her eyes. As the clock struck 11 she heard the car wheels in the drive. She put cold hands to her cheeks. The face burned as with fever.

Liane heard voices in the lower hall, Tressa's mischievous and animated. She caught the low rumble of Clive's answer. Perhaps they were laughing at her!

She turned a page, unseeing, and an instant later heard a knock at the door. For the space of three heartbeats she held herself rigid. Then, "Who's there?" she asked in a strange voice.

"It's I. Clive. May I come in?"

He turned the knob. He stood there, windblown, in his gray suit. There was a smudge on his cheek.

"Do come in and close the door." Her tone was high, strained.

"I'm awfully sorry about tonight. We had a flat just outside Rockville Center. Not near a garage, so I had to change it myself."

"I see." The words were icy.

He looked at her oddly. "Sorry it put you out but I knew when Tressa phoned you wouldn't worry."

LIANE sat up very stiff and straight, the folds of her lace negligee falling away from her young shoulders.

"But she didn't."

"Didn't phone? Oh, yes she did. His air of perplexity seemed real. If it hadn't been for what Muriel had told her Liane might almost have believed him.

"All right, if you want it that way." She stared at him balefully, defying him to lie to her. A year ago she hadn't cared what any man did. Now his actions were of prime importance to her.

"He said lamely, 'I hope you didn't mind a solitary evening too much.'"

She laughed bitterly. "Not at all."

"It's all right, then?"

If she had been in position to do so she would have stamped her foot at this. Must he be reassured when he had been out philandering?

"Yes, it's all right."

She wished he would go away before she started to weep. Instead he came a step nearer. "What's that you're reading?"

She held the book out at arm's length.

Awkwardly he said, "Teasdale. Some of that's awfully good. Didn't know you liked it or I might have got you some of the others."

She caught at the folds of lace falling across her young breast. Tears stung at the back of her eyes. Clive looked at the page she had marked. She knew the words by heart. There was something unbearably poignant about them:

"Oh, there are eyes that he can see, And hands to make his hands feel."

But to my lover I must be Only a voice."

"Oh, there are breasts to bear his head, And lips whereon his lips can lie, But I must be till I am dead, Only a cry."

He put down the book quickly and looked at her. The bright tears were falling at last. He thought angrily, "Must she weep for that man always?"

"Good night," he said, softly. He felt a boor, desecrating a shrine.

She raised those brimming eyes to his. How was he to know that she wept for him and him alone? She wanted to hold out her arms to him, to cradle his head against her heart.

Instead she said "Good night."

Clive closed the door softly, shutting her in with her tears.

TRESSA stood watching him amusedly as he turned away. "My dear man," she began laughingly.

He wheeled. "You? I thought you'd turned in."

"I hadn't. I wanted a final smoke and had a single one left."

She exhibited her case of silver gilt and jade as proof. "My dear man, how long has this been going on?" she inquired as they went downstairs together. She looked back at the closed door.

Clive flushed uncomfortably. "Don't know what you mean."

"Ah, yes, you do. She's no wife to you, Clive darling, and I know it." She patted his arm. "Anyone can see."

His eyes darkened, flashed. "I forbid you to speak like that."

She smiled airily. "Oh, very well. But it's foolish of you. You know how fond I am of you. I only want to help."

Suddenly he said, "Tressa, didn't you tell me that you called the house that time?"

She tossed her head. "I did try, ages and ages, but no one answered."

He fixed her with a stern, forbidding glance. "You said you had got them—that you had given Ellen the message."

She blew a cloud of smoke airily before she answered. "Did I? Well, I must have been thinking of something else." She laughed at him, all impudence. For an instant he stared into him mocking, beautiful eyes. She was very near to him.

The exotic fragrance she habitually used came to him, heady and bewildering.

"I'd like to shake you," he muttered.

"Wouldn't you, just?" Her laugh tinkled. She came closer, her white teeth showing through the scarlet of her lips.

Clive caught at her shoulder. Tressa whirled about.

"Now, my dear, what's all this?" she murmured. Her face was very close to his. His eyes were black with anger, hers alight with mischief. To the girl who stood on the stairs, watching them, the pair looked as though locked in a close embrace. She would have turned to flee, but the stair creaked and gave her away.

"Ah, Lady Macbeth!" Tressa's laugh was barred with fury. "Spying on us, aren't you?"

Liane said choking, "I wanted the book I left—"

"Oh, well, that's always a good excuse." The other woman mocked her.

Clive strode forward. "Tressa, what are you saying? What are you trying to make Liane think?"

Tressa threw back her head defying him.

"What she already knows. That you're mad about me, and I about you."

Lightning Bolt Strikes Farmer as He Smokes

BLYTEVILLE, Ark.—(AP)—A bolt of lightning interrupted the evening smoke of Jim Owens as he sat on the porch of his home recently.

As it struck, Owens was hurried in one direction and his pipe in the other. He suffered only a burn across the back.

Two pennies in his pocket were found stuck together after the stroke.

At a political convention, observes the office sage, social convention goes hung.

Film Star Must Learn to Walk Due to Hurts

HOLLYWOOD, Calif.—(AP)—Joan Bennett, screen actress, must learn to walk again.

The screen player, now a hospital patient as the result of being thrown from a horse during the filming of a motion picture two weeks ago, is suffering from a fractured hip and spine injury.

Her physician said the latter injury will make it necessary for her to learn how to walk again, but that she will suffer no permanent disability.

Miss Bennett, a sister to Constance and Barbara Bennett of the films, probably will be in the hospital for at least eight more weeks.

Battles at Odds—and Wins!

Ten pounds of fish to the ounce of fishing rod were the odds at weighing in time after Henry U. Birdseye of Rivo Alto Island, Fla., had landed this 69-pound sailfish. Using a six and one-quarter ounce common bass rod with a nine-thread line he captured this fellow after 24 minutes of fighting. Birdseye uses this light weight equipment to give the fish a break, but they seldom get it.

Historic Ceremony of Indians Most Colorful

Few White Men Until Recently Have Been Allowed to Witness the Sacrificial Rites of Keetowahs in Oklahoma

MUSKOGEE, Okla. —(P)—Among the colorful and historic ceremonies of Indian tribes in Oklahoma, that of the Keetowahs is perhaps the most weird of all.

Few white men until recently had seen the sacrificial rites, staged periodically around the "seven eternal fires," kept burning by the factor of the Keetowahs which came to Oklahoma from Georgia when the Indians were allotted lands in Indian Territory.

When the Keetowahs sacrificed a snow white chicken in a picturesque night hawk Cherokee ceremonial near Gore, Okla., a few days ago, Grant Foreman, historian and expert on Indian lore, of Muskogee, attended the rites and was granted the privilege of taking pictures of the sacrifice for the first time in history.

The Keetowah, Foreman explained in describing the ritual, is a religious and patriotic organization composed in the main of full-blooded Indians who have fought to preserve ancient virtues, traditions and customs of the tribe.

They vainly opposed efforts of the government to abolish tribal organizations and customs of the tribe.

They vainly oppose efforts of the government to abolish tribal organization. The Civil war found them on the side of the union and many of them fought for their "great white father" in the World war.

Their ceremonials such as the one Foreman lately witnessed are to give thanks for blessings received and invoke future gifts of providence, and to commemorate the lives of two great Cherokees—Sequoyah, whose alphabet made his tribe an educated people, and their one-time chieftain, Redbird Smith. Other members of the society who have died recently are also honored.

"The ceremonial ground," Foreman related, "is a circle about 100 feet in diameter, perfectly level and smoothed by the tramping and dancing of feet for many years.

"In the center was the fire that has been burning for 48 years on top of the accumulation of ash for that period, which is retained by a concrete inclosure about two feet high and 10 feet across. Around the fire, in the mound, where four segments of huge logs extending from the fire to each of the four points of the compass, symbolizing equality of the law to all men in all directions.

"Seven unenclosed houses or sheds spaced evenly around the circle and facing the fire provided seats for representatives of the seven clans who on occasion occupy them with punctilious regard for seating arrangements.

"Promptly at noon the venerable Jess Locust stepped out near the fire and began an invocation in Cherokee, the language in which all the proceedings were conducted. The waiting crowd near filling the space up to the edge of the circle."

Presently while hundreds of Indians stood bareheaded in devout attention, Locust stepped upon the mound near the fire, a white chicken in his hands tightly bound in a small feathered bundle.

"White head bowed over the chicken and tears running down his cheeks," Foreman continued, "Locust delivered a prayer in the presence of the silent multitude, solemnly deposited his little sacrifice in the center of the fire and stepped away."

There followed eulogies of departed tribesmen by Indian speakers, and then, at 2 o'clock the crowd was called to a feast of barbecued beef, green corn and hominy which had been cooked all the night before.

Later, many of the Indians visited the grave of Redbird Smith, not far away. At night the fire was built up to make a cheerful glow, and a throng of dancers, swelling as the hours passed, stamped and chanted till dawn.

1931 Drier Than Last Year When Drouth Hit

WASHINGTON.—(P)—Paradoxical as it may seem, it has been drier this year than last when drouth swept the country and crops are faring decidedly better.

The answer is, J. B. Kincer, weather bureau meteorologist said Thursday, there has been a more even distribution of moisture through the growing months.

Records show only a few states have had as much rain this year as in 1930. The agricultural department's crop report issued this week told of practically all crops being affected during July. Generous yields of the most important crops still are assured.

Rains in the last two weeks generally relieved dry conditions, Kincer said, and the prospects are that late crops will show much improvement.
